It is no exaggeration to say that factories and construction sites can be among the most dangerous places to work. With lots going on, such as heavy materials and plant machinery constantly on the move, the potential for accidents is considerable.

But of course, this is greatly reduced if the right people receive the right training at the right intervals, as required under the Health & Safety at Work Act 1974. Which is where expert training companies such as SB Training (UK) of Diglis, Worcester come in.

From its base at the Adroit Complex in Trow Way, it specialises in the delivery of fork lift truck and plant operator training courses, offering carefully structured programmes that are undertaken under the supervision of fully qualified and registered instructors. Indeed, SB Training's instructors have individual experience ranging from five to 38 years. All training can be carried out on-site or in-house, from either the company's head office in Skelmersdale, Lancashire, or from its training centres in Worcester and Aintree, all of which are specifically tailored to meet the needs and requirements of all courses.

Accredited training and testing offered by SB covers a wide range of industry essentials for plant and fork lift truck operation with a variety of additional courses including health and safety at work, risk assessment, site safety awareness and manual handling. Other subjects soon to be covered include fork lift truck instructor courses, first aid courses and operator recruitment services. When you consider the consequences of getting things wrong, it really does pay to be trained by the experts.
